1. How can I tell the difference between FDA-regulated PPE and PPE that the FDA does not regulate?

The determining factor is its intended use. If the products are intended to prevent, mitigate or treat a disease or illness, then the FDA regulates those products. If the intended use is for general-purpose protection or industrial use (products that are not intended to prevent disease or illness), then they are not regulated by FDA.

A clear description that shows the intended use of the goods is of utmost importance. For example, if N95 respirators are being imported for use by medical personnel, then a good description would be 'N95 respirators for use by medical personnel'.
