SHIPPING ALCOHOL: FIND YOUR PATH WITH FEDEX

Only FedEx-approved, licensed businesses may ship alcohol. Your type of business, to whom you are shipping, and the destination of the shipment determine whether FedEx can accept your alcohol shipment. To see if your alcohol shipment can be accepted by FedEx, review the graphic below. PLEASE NOTE: FedEx can accept alcohol shipments only from FedEx-approved alcohol shippers with proper labeling and alcohol indicators. For more information about the approval process, contact your FedEx account executive or FedEx Customer Service.

Licensed wineries are permitted to ship to most licensed entities in most states. Restrictions apply in the states of Mississippi and Utah. Shipments can move via FedEx Express®, FedEx Ground® and FedEx Home Delivery® services.

State laws regulate if wineries can ship wine and to which states they can ship. Review the FedEx Direct-to-Consumer Wine Shipping State Reference Guide to see if FedEx will transport your shipment.

Retailers are not permitted to ship alcohol to consumers. Retailer-to-licensee shipping is prohibited. Review the FedEx Direct-to-Consumer Wine Shipping State Reference Guide to see if FedEx will transport your shipment.

State laws regulate if retailers can ship wine and to which states they can ship. Review the FedEx Direct-to-Consumer Wine Shipping State Reference Guide to see if FedEx will transport your shipment.

Shippers must comply with origin and destination countries’ laws and regulations governing international alcohol shipments. Shipments can move via FedEx Express only; FedEx Ground does not accept any international shipments containing alcohol. Only wine may be shipped to individuals. Review the FedEx International Wine Shipping Country Documentation Requirements to confirm if your destination country is approved for the transportation of wine to consumers. We can help you simplify international alcohol shipping with services, resources, and tools, like our landed cost calculator.
