Argentina Import Restrictions

Argentina has restrictions on consumer goods at import (Resolution No. 3252). Under the Anticipated Imports Sworn Statement (Declaracion Jurada Anticipada de Importacion - DJAI), importers must declare shipments they wish to import into Argentina prior to shipping. Shipments allowed to be cleared under the express regime are exempt from this regulation. Argentina customs regulations for express shipments limit the weight/value per shipment to 5kg or US$1. However, any shipment sent International Priority Broker Select Option (IP BSO) or express shipments containing restricted commodities regardless of value that cannot be cleared under the express regime are subject to DJAI. Per customs, shipments that do not meet the new DJAI requirements will be returned to the shipper at their expense. The commodities listed below have a higher tendency of being subject to DJAI requirements:

Canada Import Restrictions

The importation of certain classes of merchandise may be prohibited or restricted to protect the economy and security of Canada, to safeguard consumer health and well being, and to preserve domestic plant and animal life. Many prohibited or restricted imports are subject, in addition to Customs requirements, to the laws and regulations administered by other Canadian Government agencies that the Canada Border Services Agency enforces. These laws and regulations may, for example, prohibit entry; limit entry to certain ports; restrict routing, storage, usage, require treatment, labeling or processing as a condition of release. Customs release only takes place when the additional requirements are met. These requirements apply to all importation types, including shipments made by mail. The main prohibited or restricted articles are listed below. Importers into Canada should consult with the Canadian agencies governing the commodity for detailed information and guidance.
